About the International Seminar

The International Seminar "Population, Society, and Policy-Making in Contemporary India" is a significant academic gathering that will explore the intricate dynamics of India's demographic trends and their implications for society and governance. This seminar will bring together experts from diverse fields, including demography, sociology, economics, and public policy, fostering an interdisciplinary dialogue on the challenges and opportunities posed by India's population changes.

Key themes of the seminar include population growth and its impact on resources, urbanization, migration patterns, and the socio-economic disparities that arise from these trends. Discussions also delve into the effectiveness of current policy measures and the need for innovative approaches to address issues such as aging, health care, education, and employment.

The seminar highlights the importance of evidence-based policy-making in addressing population-related challenges. It emphasizes the role of data and research in shaping policies that are equitable and sustainable. Participants share insights on best practices from other countries and regions, aiming to adapt these to the Indian context.

Overall, the seminar will serve as a crucial platform for scholars, policymakers, and practitioners to collaborate, exchange ideas, and formulate strategies that can effectively respond to the complexities of population dynamics in contemporary India, ensuring a balanced and inclusive development trajectory.
